Narrative update:

Hey everybody!

As predicted, the start of semester has felt quite intense, with many students settling back into study and campus life – me included.

In my role as Northern Campus President this month, my focus has been on building connections with UTAS staff and external stakeholders involved with the University. I attended several networking events, including organised breakfasts, and I was fortunate to be invited to the Riawunna International Women's Day Scholarship Funding Breakfast on Wednesday 04/03. This was a valuable opportunity to learn more about the important work of the Riawunna Centre, explore ideas for how TUSA can collaborate to enhance the student experience, and engage with members of the broader community while strengthening relationships that support students.

I also attended campaign training alongside the TUSA Student Council, as well as training with TCCI, which has helped build skills that will support our advocacy work moving forward.

Throughout the month, I have continued assisting students visiting the TUSA office at the cottage in Inveresk, and have been present during initiatives such as Food Hub and the free lunch events run by Food Hub administrator, Maddie. These services remain an important point of connection and support for students on campus.

Regular communication with my fellow TUSA representatives has been very valuable, as we work with and support each other while balancing our study commitments.

As always, I encourage students to attend campus events, get involved where they can, and reach out to us if they need support.

Looking ahead, I am excited to attend the upcoming annual retreat, which will focus on developing strategies to improve the student experience at UTAS. I am also aiming to further strengthen engagement with students at AMC and the Newnham campus.
